Microbicidal Gel Shows Reduced Risk of HIV & Herpes Infections in Women

[Durbin, South Africa and Vienna,

July 20, 2010

Researchers have achieved an important scientific breakthrough in the fight against HIV and genital herpes with a vaginal gel that significantly reduces a woman's risk of being infected with these viruses.
The results of the groundbreaking safety and effectiveness study of an antiretroviral microbicide
gel study were reported by the Centre for the AIDS Program of Research in South Africa (CAPRISA) at the XVIII International AIDS Conference in Vienna, Austria.

The microbicide containing 1% tenofovir-an antiretroviral drug widely used in the treatment of HIV-was found to be 39% effective in reducing a woman's risk of becoming infected with HIV during sex and 51% effective in preventing genital herpes infections in the women participating in the trial. Should other studies of tenofovir gel confirm these results, widespread use of the gel, at this level of protection, could prevent over half a million new HIV infections in South Africa alone over the next decade.
